It will be weeks before we completely can fathom the magnitude of this calamity. At a moment when many believed Haiti was entering a hopeful period of stability and economic growth, what we have begun to hear is heartbreaking and tragic. The nation's infrastructure, already one of the poorest in the world, has broken down, destroying schools, hospitals, and government buildings. Relief offices have collapsed and their staff workers are among the victims. Our hearts and prayers are centered on Haitians who are trapped in rubble, severely wounded, or have died.

Click here for more information, including about how to help.